Public Advocate Letitia James Calls On Increased Training for Healthcare Workers In Light of Ebola Infections

(Nueva York, NY)— “While there is no immediate threat of Ebola in New York City, I remain gravely concerned by the spread of the virus, and the lack of preparedness and training for frontline healthcare professionals. Our federal, state, and city officials must do more so that our doctors, nurses, and other healthcare providers receive training on the proper procedures necessary to successfully stop the spread of this deadly virus, and ensure the safety and health of the public. We must be vigilant and guarantee that our frontline health care providers receive the best training and resources,” said New York City Public Advocate Letitia James.
